The National Immigration Agency (NIA) in Taiwan announced that new immigrant mothers who are divorced with children born in Taiwan are allowed to continue staying in Taiwan despite that they lose the custody of their children. The NIA's decision to amend the law is invariably linked with the protection of the children's rights and interests. The NIA restated that Article 31 of the Immigration Act in 2007 was modified to safeguard the rights and interests of foreign spouses after a divorce. The amendment contains enabling them to have the custody of children after a divorce and get divorced with their Taiwanese spouses if they are victims of domestic violence.

In the past, new immigrant mothers who are divorced without the custody of their children are usually compelled to leave the country. Yet, their right to have visitation of their children will still be granted depending on the NIA's evaluation of each case concerning to what extent the mothers are involved in bearing and rearing their Taiwan-born children before they are deported finally. With this adjustment in law, the court will decide whether a mother can obtain the custody of her child/children according to paragraph 4 of Article 31 of the Immigration Act. Once granted, a new immigrant mother in such a circumstance will be authorized to continue dwelling in this country. In the case of a new immigrant mother who has already gone back to her country of origin after a divorce, the NIA claimed that she can still come back to Taiwan with a visitor visa provided that she used to be a legal resident in Taiwan who was the primary caretaker of her child/children or kept in full contact with them.

- 21 Which interest group in Taiwan is most likely to welcome this new amendment in law?

 - (C) It sets up a new model of policy-making that takes the welfare of new immigrant families into consideration.
 - (D) It materializes the ideal of social justice when new immigrant family issues are taken into account.
- 23 What is another benefit that a new immigrant mother can gain from this law amendment apart from being allowed to stay in Taiwan after a divorce?
- (A) She can apply for a visitor visa.
 - (B) She can get a divorce if she wants.
 - (C) She can choose to leave the country.
 - (D) She can obtain her child/children's custody.
- 24 What is the criterion that a new immigrant mother must fulfill in order to benefit from this amendment in law?
- (A) She needs to stay in Taiwan for at least ten years.
